Dove manure is even better, tor it contains more orgat matter, nearly as much nitrogs and a third less lime, which make it safer to use. Sheep manure has also been known to produce marvelous growth, which may be attributed to the unusal amount of organic matter it contains. Cow manure is, perhaps, safest and best of all for general use, as it contains all things in moderation.

A LOBSTER'S VOILET.

How Re on the water and the water was a key key was a key key key key and consumption and be cared.

It has not happened to every one to see a lobster cast his shell. Last summer I had an opportunity of watching the process. I was staying for several weeks in a secluded little village on the south coast, and one day, when the only fisherman in the place returned after taking up his "pots," he flung upon the beach a specimen toe small for shele or home consumption. The prize was taken possession of by n boy, who presented it to my improvised aquarium, for which all the little boys of the village were enthusiastic collectors. I kept the water well acrated and devoted a great deal of time and attention to my various live stock, and at last my reward came. At the time of his capture my lobster had already begun to think about getting a new suit, and as the days went by the old shell became so small for his capture my lobster had already begun to think about getting a new suit, and as the days went by the old shell became so small for him that he could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sective the losser in the could no longer avoid discarding his sect

Ex-President Cleveland is one of the professors of Princetor University who recently signed the petition for a license to retail liqors in the Priuceton Inn, much to the astonishment of the alumni, faculty and trustees of that hon ored institution, as well as the disgust of every parent who has looked upon Princeton as a place where he might send his son with some feeling of security on ac-count of the religious as well as moral and temperance influences that would surround him. Per haps Mr. Cleveland thought it would help him in his candidacy for Senator from New Jersey, but if we are not mistaken the people of that State will, through their Legislature, administer a just re buke to the man who can so for get the dignity and honor that had been twice conferred upon him of being elected to the chief place in the nation, and the addi-tional honor of the position he now holds in the historic institu-tion of Princeton, as to use his influence to secure a license for a saloon that is to be run in such close proximity to their boys, and

A question worthy of serious consideration is this: The man who earns his living by manual labor, and who studies the money question to find relief from the present oppressive conditions, wants more money, and he pleads for it, while the man of capital who makes money off of money wants the single gold standard. The latter has studied the question tion the same as the former; has had the same aids to come to a correct conclusion. Efforts in sinking wells in the desert between Wadylaffs and Abu-Hamed have been crowned with success. Neither Europeans nor natives had previously suspected the presence of water at such a distance from the Nile. It clocks as if the discovery would, in the hands of advancing civilization, be the means, not only of revolutionizing the means, not only of revolutionizing the desert tribes, but the entire con-ditions of desert life. because they do not work to succeed A good way to lift the burdens resting on us now is to work and apply earnings toward the liquidation of debt ings toward the liquidation of debts and let specialitions, corner lots in boom towns &c, become a thing of the past. Some people who don't succeed would inform us that there is nothing to do but our experience is to the contrary and we say positively that all men can get work of some kind and at some price. It is true that times can be made better by the said of bimetallism and other Democratic measures, they will be but by the aid of bimetallism and other Democratic measures, they will be but even under existing circumstances men can get along if only after a fashion. A man who could earn $5 per day in the past does not like to work for $1 now but we must remember times have changed and it is better to work for 25c per day than to lost while waiting for the return of prosperity. A better plan would be to single out some special business and give it your time and talents every particle of it.

Christ Our Leader.

The true christian has much to en-courage him, for he knows who his commander is. Here is the secret: he knows that his Leader is Christ he knows that his Leader is Christ, and that Christ has never yet lost a battle. As it was said at Rome, "fact no Romen soldier fear while Cresar is alive," so let no christian soldier fear while Christ, his Leader, is alive. The Duke of Weilington once ordered an officer to undertake a duty which involved great personal bravery. The man did not shrink from it, but, turning to the Duke he said as he reached ing to the Duke he said, as he reached out his hand, "Let me, before I go, have one grasp of your all-conquering hand and I can do it." Christ sends hand and I can do it." Christ sends each one of his disciples forth to meet duty; but, with a grip of his all-con-quering hand, he teaches us to war. He goes with us into our battles. He strengthens us in the midst of our contests. He leads us wisely and well.

been able to create a character of a different stock from his own! Certainly all the greatest figures of fiction are compatriots of their actions. We have had many carpetlag novelists of late—men and women who go forth gnyly and study a foreign country from the platform of a parlor car—and some of these are able to spin yarns which hold the attention of listening thousands. What the people of the forficial countries think of these superficial tales we can measure when we recall the contempt in which we Americans hold the efforts made by one and asolver of the efforts made by one and asolver of the efforts made by one and asolver of the efforts made by recall the contempt in which we Americans hold the efforts made by one and another of the British nov-elists to lay the seene of a story here in the United States. Dickens and Trollope and Reade were men of varied gifts, keen observers all of them, but how lamentable the spectacle when they endeavored to portray an American! Probably most American American! Probably most American endeavors to portray an Englishman are quite as foolish in the eyes of the British. Dickens twice choose to compete with the carpetbag novelists, and if we Americans are unwilling to see a correct picture of our life in "Martin Chuzzlewit," we may be sure that the French are as unwilling to see a correct picture of our life in "Martin Chuzzlewit," we may be sure that the French are as unwilling to see a correct picture of our life of Two Cities" as an accurate portrayal of the most dramatic epoch in their history.

There are those who think it was a or dramatic epoch in their history.

There are those who think it was a piece of imperitience for a Londoner like Dickens to suppose that be could escape the incorroble limitations of his birth and education and hope to see Americans or Frenchmen as they really are. Far finer artists than Dickens have falled in this—artists of a far more exquisite touch.

artiss and Josepha and Emired touch.

The masterpieces of the great painters instantly declare the race to which the limmer himself belonged. Rubens and Velasquez and Titina traveled and saw the world. They have left us portraits of many nationalities, and yet every man and woman Rubens penitors seems to us Dutch, every man and woman Rubens penitors seems to us Patish. In short, a man can no more escape from his race than be can escape from his from the most try to do beth.—Professor Brander Matthews in Forum.

A cheryman told me an amusing story the other day of an eccentric old lady in his parish who was devoted to good works and quite a second curate in the parish in spite of her eccentricities. Having to leave home on one occasion, she had to pay some small parochial account for him, a matter of frequent occurrence when he happened to be away; but, knowing how punctificus he was about respayment as soon as he returned, she was much embarrassed that on this occasion he called several times without alluling to the subject.

Some six months later he suddenly remembered his omission and had you go gisted, but the simple old out had found a way out of the difficulty, as she assured him, by repaying herself. "But how did you do that!" said her vicar in surpise. "Oh, when I saw you had forgotten all about it I just stopped my usual contribution on Sundays until I had paid myself back!" Her surprise was immense when she was greeted by a hearty burst of laughter.—Lady's Pictorial.
